Development of the new city of Milton Keynes started at the end of the 1960s but by the middle of the 1970s there was still no local hospital. In the 1970s a campaign with the slogan 'Milton Keynes is Dying for a Hospital' was led by local residents, who erected a now infamous question mark on the proposed site. The campaign resulted in a commitment to build a hospital on the current site.

The hospital finally opened in September 1984 employing around 1,000 staff. The second phase was added in 1992 and in 2009 an army of over 3,000 staff and 500 volunteers delivered care to patients.

'It is through the determination, passion and hard work of our staff and voluntary workforce that Milton Keynes Hospital has improved, grown and thrived over the years.'

Jill Rodney, Chief Executive, Milton Keynes Hospital NHS Foundation Trust, 2009.
