Dramatics at Bletchley Park

Bletchley Park had an excellent selection of dramatic societies. The group put on numerous performances such as 'Shakespeare' productions, 'They Came to a City' and 'It's the End', to raise money for the Red Cross. Huge effort was put into these performances even though resources were scarce.

'We had Can-Can dresses made out of blackout material and dyed bandages for coloured frills'

The groups would learn lines, construct sets, design lighting, and find props all in the small amount of spare time they had between shifts.
