Working Life – The Open University

Denzil DeSouza at his desk in the Open University

Denzil DeSouza moved from Zimbabwe to the UK with his family in 2001. His IT qualifications weren't recognised in the UK, so finding a job was difficult. Denzil joined the Open University and his career has gone from strength to strength, partly because he took the opportunity to study at the Open University.

Denzil's previous life in Zimbabwe – at the Victoria Falls, and relaxing with his family

One of the proudest days of his life was graduating with an MSc in Computing for Commerce and Industry in 2007. He really enjoys his work and is involved in all kinds of things:

- attending workshops to help managers understand diversity issues
- part of the BME email network
- mentoring high school students from the local community
- member of the OU squash team!

'I just want to help other people receive the same opportunities I have had.'
